The law partnership which has existed between Woodruff Wilson and Bainbridge Colby since Mr. Wilson retired from the Presidency is to be terminated today, which fact is regarded in some circles as added evidence that the former President is again turning his attention to politics.

In the Day's News

The Earl of Granard, who has been appointed the first Senator of the new Irish Free State, belongs to one of the oldest and most distinguished families of Ireland. His Irish seat is Castle Forbes, Longford, where his family has resided since the seventeenth century. The Earl, who is now in his fiftieth year, is a soldierly man of distinguished appearance. He saw service in the South African war and won the Queen's medal. At the commencement of the war in Europe he was appointed to command a battalion of the Royal Irish regiment. He is a peer of the United Kingdom as well as of Ireland. In 1909 the Earl was married to Miss Beatrice Mills, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills of New York, and niece of the late Whitelaw Reid, who served as United States ambassador to Great Britain.

Mourning Their Loss

After a delightful week's visit at the college which I attended last year, I was escorted to the station by a swarm of jolly friends. It began to rain hard just as they were bidding me good-by. As I boarded the train one of them called: "O, how we all hate to see you leave! Look! Even the sales are crying hard!"—Exchange.
